Teaching Math and Reading through Cooking!

Kids love to cook, bake and experiment with food. We also know how beneficial cooking is for children. They are gaining a whole boatload of skills and lessons from cooking. They learn science along with fine motor skills, sequencing and direction following.

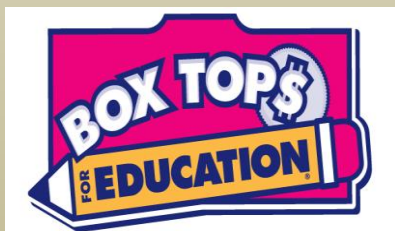

During the holidays, we do lots of cooking. Use this time to allow your children to continue learning during the winter break. Choose your own specific family recipe that will help extend your child’s reading and math through cooking (Mom with a lesson.com).

The goals with most recipes are:

1. Direction following and sequencing
2. Reading skills (matching, sight words, beginning

Tools for Triumph – When responding to an adult, always answer by saying “yes ma’am or “No sir’ or use their name such as “yes, Mr. Jones” or “no, Mrs. Jones.”
